Investment objective

To build capital in real (inflation-adjusted) terms over the medium to longer term. Investors should expect a high correlation to stock market behaviour and rewards, and be entirely comfortable with substantial volatility and very limited protection in times of market weakness.

Risk profile

The strategy is managed with a maximum target of 100% equity market exposure and is categorised as a Bordier Risk Profile 5.

Investment update

Political events took centre stage over November with the Republican victory in the US election having a significant impact on markets. The US equity market was buoyant with the S&P 500 Index up nearly 6% in US dollar terms, driven by the expectation of tax cuts, deregulation, increased government spending and protectionist policies. Smaller US companies, which are more exposed to the US domestic economy, performed even better. In contrast, markets connected to regions such as Asia and Latin America struggled due to concerns over Trump's proposed trade policy. The potential negative impact of a stronger US dollar also weighed heavily on these regions. Eurozone markets were broadly flat, held back by some trade concerns and some lacklustre earnings and economic announcements, while the UK market rose 2.5%, helped by its heavy weighting in the outperforming financials sector. The US Federal Reserve announced a further 25 basis point interest rate cut over the month, signalling greater confidence that inflationary pressures continue to recede. The Bank of England announced a similar cut, driven by the increased spending proposals announced in the budget. The expected path of interest rates across the globe continues to diverge. Weak economic data in the eurozone supports further significant policy loosening from the European Central Bank while rate cut expectations in the US continue to moderate as the economy recovers and inflation forecasts tick up. A backdrop of generally resilient global economic growth, moderating global inflation (including wage growth) and reductions in interest rates should continue to be supportive for a wide range of asset classes moving into 2025. As such, no changes were made over the month and the strategy remains at the top end of its allowable equity range. However, we are currently reviewing the likely headwinds and tailwinds of a second Trump presidency – US equities exposed to the domestic economy look set to be relative beneficiaries on the back of lower taxes, reshoring, deregulation and spending on critical infrastructure. In contrast, sectors such as renewable energy could face headwinds. Smaller US companies seem well placed to benefit and moves are afoot to increase exposure at the expense of sustainable/renewable energy and environmental exposure held within our thematic allocation.
